Course Description:
Whether or not you ever have the word “director” in your title, all information professionals will eventually be required to lead a project, a team, or a workplace. This course takes a two-pronged approach by examining real-life library leadership and management concerns while simultaneously learning a model of organizational leadership that can be used to grapple with any real-world library leadership situation.

Instructor: Dr. Sarah Clark

Dr. Clark is currently the Library Associate Director at Rogers State University, but will soon be Library Dean and University Librarian, La Salle University, Pennsylvania.
